* a note on the translation of Ecclesiastes 2:24 — almost all English versions of the Bible render this verse something like the NASB: “There is nothing better for a man than to eat and drink and tell himself that his labor is good. This also I have seen that it is from the and of God.”

This verse should, however, be translated “There is no good in man that he could eat and drink and cause his soul to see good in his labor. This also I have seen that it is from the hand of God.”
